9.25 pm Running Blind: Desmond Bagley's best-seller, now a fast-moving TV thriller with an Icelandic background. Here Jack Gerson introduces the leading characters

ALAN STEWART has a past he is trying to forget. That past included strange journeys abroad, passports in many names, dangerous encounters and sudden death in a northern forest. Believing all this is over, he receives a visitor from his past and finds himself again on a mission into the unknown.

ELIN RAGNARSDOTTIR met and fell in love with Alan Stewart. Suddenly her love for Alan leads her into a nightmare chase across the wild hinterland of her native Iceland, the Odadahraun, the 'Murderer's Country' of Icelandic legend. And for Elin it becomes again murderer's country...

SLADE, a high-ranking officer in British Intelligence, has made a career out of corruption and betrayal. He will use Alan as a courier to carry a mysterious piece of equipment; and, when Alan's usefulness is at an end, will not hesitate to terminate his mission with 'extreme prejudice'.

VASLAV KENNIKIN is Slade's opposite number in the KGB. A complex man, he is tormented by a desire for vengeance against the enemy he once counted as friend. That enemy is Alan Stewart...

Paula Prentiss
Woody Allen
guest appearance by Ursula Andress

When Michael James consults psychiatrist Fritz Fassbender, the outcome only adds to his problem
— an over-abundance of beautiful girls.

Humorist Woody Allen made his film debut as both writer and actor in this hilarious look at 20thcentury's man's obsession with sex.
Peter O'Toole is the lucky man in the midst of a breathtaking array of delectable females, and Peter Sellers is in his best Continental form as the eccentric Fassbender.
